Management expert Peter Drucker once wryly remarked, “Working with people is difficult, but not impossible.” It is certainly obvious that many people are difficult to deal with, but after this seminar, hopefully you will find they are not impossible. You will be empowered to understand behavior patterns and establish good working relationships with even the most frustrating individuals.

Lorena Mathien is an Assistant Professor and PSM Coordinator in the Mathematics Department at Buffalo State College. Her courses include the “professional” classes included in the Professional Applied and Computational Mathematics (PACM) graduate program. Prior to academia, Lorena worked in industry for over 17 years in areas ranging from business process consulting to software development, implementation, and training, to project and portfolio management. She has diverse training and application in the area of communication management. Lorena is a graduate of Syracuse University with an undergraduate degree in Marketing Management and the University